It is of the very highest importance that t master of a ship should be a man about shadow of doubt. He is placed in charge not only of much valuable property, in the shape the wants and suit the wishes of purchasers. of the vessel and its cargo, but he is also responsible for what is of yet greater value, namely, human life. It is necessary, therefore, to ask, what in the name of wonder he can that the captain shall be steady, sober, and | mean? Is he going to open a linen-draper's conscientious. Unless he can be implicitly depended upon for these qualities, his abili- | tusted by the zerl he mentions, but to judge ties as a seaman, however brilliant they may be, weigh as naught in the balance. Many lives have ere now been lost at sea, owing to the want of care and thought of the captain, who has gone below to indulge in conviviality, leaving the ship to be guided by suppose that Mr. Taylor's object is to recruit bis subordinates. But cases of this kind are happily becoming much rarer. Masters of ships are far more deeply impressed with the a counter. Well, we congratulate them upon responsibility attaching to their position, and far less reckless of human life than was bigher game. the case in bygone days. Most of the casualties which have occurred lately have been due more to causes over which the captains have had no control than from carelessness or negligence on their part.

Such a plea, however, could not be advanced in the case of the British schooner Trelevan Family, which stranded on the 7th instant. Not only was the captain of that vessel in a state of inebriety at the time the accident happened, but the mate was also in a like condition. Both of these officers were conclusively proved to have been the worse for liquor and unfit for duty at a critical moment. The master went below to sleep before the ship was clear of the Chow Chatti Rocks, and when it bumped on the rocks neither he nor the mate were in a fit state to perform the duties required of them. Under these circumstances, the public will very heartily concur in the sentence passed. upon them by the Naval Court which was held the other day at Amoy to Charles Shadwell will be retained by him unti inquire into their conduct. The Court have be arrives on the home station; and as this suspended their certificates for nine calendar be congratulated on the many delays which months and severely consured them. SINGAPORE HARBOUR.

Our authorities may not be aware how much the accommodation for merchant shipping in the Old Harbour is now circumscribed. First of all, in the very centre of the Harbour, in a straight line with Dalhousie Pier obelisk and the Fort Canning flagstaff, a buoy is moored in 8 fathoms water on which is a placard warning all merchant vessels that the man-of-war anchorage stands for one cable's length on each side of this buoy, which means that 1,200 feet of the centre of the Harbour, extending from Dalhousic Pier nearly two miles out, is reserved for the ships of the Royal Navy. How little he said if I did not sign be would send me to available anchorage is left to merchant ships to the Eastward of the line we have described, the close proximity of the did not do this or cause it be done. Two month Tanjong Kutong shore makes clear. Then, since Gunjunued seized the books. on the Westward side of the reserved line, the anchorage for merchant shipping has been and is being gradually narrowed by the engroushment of the fishing stakes on this side of Tanjong Pagar point, which are gradually being extended further out and down towards the middle of the Harbour, so that if not checked we may find these fishing etakes actually disputing the boundary line for the men-of-war. In addition, moreover, to the serious circumscribing of the Harbour anchorage which the extension of those fishing stakes is effecting, they make it most dangerous for sailing vessels getting into and out of the Harbour in that direction at night, not only from the obstruction they afford, but on account of the confusing effects of the lights which they exhibit; and to orders. obtain any accurate knowledge of the number or bearing of those stakes is impossible, for the reason that many of them are removed in one montoon and set down in another. It is true. these fishing stakes contribute to the revenue, and pay the fees on their licenses, but their extension in the manner we have described should not be encouraged on that account.-

We are mistaken if this does not turn out to be the most effectual method of "opening China" that has yet been discovered With regard to our own commercial interests. of course, the free competition of the huge population of China would revolutionice come conditions of our native industry. But such an effect must be very gradual; and in the meantime the mere influx of English skill could not fail in producing a teneficial effect on our ordinary trade and other relations with China and a connection so close as that which bids fair-to-be established would certainly lead to an increase, on the part of China, in the desire of communication with this country. Our iron trade, though less independent, cannot affected for many years to come, though it is quite possible that this nation may, guoner than has been anticipated, even by those who have threatened us with an approaching exhaustion of our coal-fields, be destined to undergo a struggle for her commercial supremacy. We may, perhaps, hope that this prospect will afford matter for some serious consideration to English capitalists and labourers in the midet of the disastrons and suicidal struggles which have become almost epidemic among us. The edifice of our trade has not been built up by the blind operation of unintelligent force, nor by the mere calculation of proportions, balances, and percentages. Minute economy prodence, and enterprise are as necessary to Bostain as to found a commercial system, and those qualities are no longer so conspicuously developed as they once were in those with whom lies the maintenance of the main trade which has given us our present sovereignty in the markets of the world. Every rumour we hear confirms the impression that the political system which has so long paralysed the industrial forces and cramped the resources of China is destined soon either to break up or to undergo important modifications. The exclusiveness of the Celestial Empire bas

POTATOES.

If an Englishman was the first to introduce he potato into Europe, a Frenchmen has dispovered the method of making the supply constant throughout the year. Luxury, indeed, can command new potatoes at almost any time. But the suspy, insipid root, which costs so much, and is reared with such difficulty, is not a proper potato, or at least does not taste like ne. There is always a disagreeable suggestion of the forcing pit and the greenhouse. A French peasant has met the difficulty, grappled with it, and conquered it. After trying every kind of soil in which to sow the routs, he at last hit upon the notion of employing salt, and found it to answer admirably. He made his experiments in scoret, so as to be certain of niccess. That success is now ascertained, and notice has been taken by the French author rities of the new method. The roots are planted in August, on a thin stratum of calt, each root having placed over it a pinch of compost, and the earth heared over that. In September the ground is dug again, and in October it is weeded. In the middle of lanuary the grop is ripe, each root bearing seven or eight potatoes attached to it. The anccess of the new method, has only just been announced. Last August twelve wonth the inventor laid down his roots and followed out the programme we have given. The result was that this time twelve month he was able to produce to the Director of the Museum of Natural History in Paris the first samples of his winter rowth, but the Parisian professor would scarcely believe that the roots placed in his hands had only just been dug out of the carth. The beasant inventor stuck to his story, and was so imperative that the experiment was epeated last August, several witnesses being evited to assist at the planting. The result has been an assured success. The whole nethod has been laid before an agricultural commission in Paris, and the Government bas promised an adequate reward to the patient
